West German Lawyer Denounced By Social Democrats For Saying Hitler Was Above Law And Guiltless

The Social Democrats, West Germany's second largest political party, denounced an assertion by a war crimes defense lawyer that Hitler was above the law and guiltless in the murder of millions of Jews.

The official press service of the opposition party demanded that the West German Bar Association investigate the intentions of Gerd Heinecke, says the New York Herald Tribune, who told a Hanover Court recently that Hitler believed he was fulfilling a "sacred mission" in annihilating the Jewish people.

Heinz Galinski, head of West Berlin's Jewish community, demanded that West German leaders repudiate the lawyer's assertion, calling them "an encouragement of a new anti-Jewish campaign." Mr. Heinecke is helping to defend five former Nazis accused of taking part in the massacre of 7,000 Jews in the Polish city of Vlodawa during World War II.

"If we permit more of this kind of speeches in cases involving mass murder, then one day we will find that Hitler as well as his concentration-camp and professional murderers will be described as representatives of a rule of law," the Social Democrats' press service asserted.

Mr. Galinski, a survivor of Auschwitz said, "All people democracy must take a stand against this infamous statement, this outspoken defense of murder. "If West German government leaders and political leaders remain silent," he added, "they should not be surprised at what happens in the future."

Justice Ministry officials in the state of Lower Saxony, in which Hanover is situated, opposed Mr. Heinecke's contention that since German law requires the element of malice to prove murder, and "Der Fuehrer did not act out of malicious motives," his accomplices cannot be guilty of complicity in murder.

A Ministry spokesman said that the systematic annihilation of racial and national groups was murder, according to valid West German legal opinion that had been confirmed by the courts. Those who participated in these deeds can, therefore, be brought before the courts for complicity in murder, the spokesman added.

In Hamburg, a spokesman for the Bar Association noted that defense lawyers could use all legal means to defend their clients. The spokesman added, however, that if Mr. Heinecke had used "the forum of the court to publicize his own political views, then he has grossly misused his position as defense lawyer."

In completing his summation, Mr. Heinecke said he would not retract his statements. He noted that he knew he had raised a hot subject, but contended that he had done so in the interest of his clients. He repeated his assertion that officials who had fulfilled their duties in the Third Reich should not be punished, says the New York Herald Tribune. "If you punish such people," he said, "then you are also making the Roman fire brigade responsible for the eruptions of Vesuvius."

A west German lawyer, defending a schoolteacher before a Hanover court for alleged war crimes, went so far as to defend Hitler, says the London Times. "To punish Hitler as a murderer would mean to punish the devil according to the laws of hell,", he argued.

The lawyer, Dr. Gerd Heinecke, of Hanover, said that Hitler's order to exterminate the Jews was an "act of madness" but as a dictator he was responsible to no one. He had not acted from ignoble motives but believed he was fulfilling a political or a holy task — like a prophet.

As the counsel then went on to claim that Hitler had not once contravened international law, the judge stopped him to point out that The Hague convention forbade the killing of civilians in occupied territories.

Switzerland Stops Ex-Nazis From Residing There

Switzerland is to stop former Nazis from taking up residence there, Ludwig von Moos, the President, said in the National Council, in Geneva, Switzerland. He was replying to a question concerning "former Nazi war criminals who have sought or found refuge" in the country, says the London Times, and the "prejudical activities of an Egyptian armaments dealer." Mr. von Moos emphasized that the Federal authorities were determined to avoid situations which could have a harmful effect on good relations with other countries.

Among persons now banned from Switzerland, he said, were Hans Walter Zech-Nennwich, a former S.S. officer who escaped from a west German prison last April and passed through Switzerland on his way to the United Arab Republic (he has since returned to West Germany and given himself up); and Dr. Hans Globke, a former member of the Adenauer Government, who was sentenced in absentia by an east German court to life imprisonment for war crimes, and who stayed last July in a villa in Lausanne belonging to his wife. Mr. von Moos said that Dr. Globke subsequently provided an assurance that he would not return to Switzerland.

The President made the point that it was no responsibility of the Government to pass judgment on particular individuals two decades after the end of the Second World War.

On the second part of the question, he said investigations showed that Hassan Bayed Kamal, the Egyptian owner of a Zurich engineering business, had purchased military material abroad for shipment to the United Arab Republic, but it had not passed through Switzerland.

Mr. von Moos referred to the practical difficulties of extending the ban on exports of war materials from Switzerland to cover also machine tools which might subsequently be used for armaments manufacture, says the London Times. He recommended that exporters should exercise discretion.

Contract In Sale Of Russian Property To Israel Signed In Jerusalem

A $4,500,000 (about $1,607,000) contract for the sale of Russian property in Jerusalem and other parts of the country to the state of Israel was signed in Jerusalem last month. The Soviet Government's actual title to the property is, in fact, dubious as it was owned by the Russian Orthodox Society, says the London Times, an organization for the relief and assistance of pilgrims to the Holy Land.

Russia dissolved the society in 1917 and neither the British administration in Palestine nor the state of Israel recognized the Soviet Government as legal heirs. The Israelis have now altered their position, apparently for political reasons.

Mikhail Bodrov, the Soviet Ambassador to Israel, credited Mr. Eshkol, Prime Minister of Israel, with breaking the deadlock and he said the agreement was a step forward in relations between the two countries.

From the Israel point of view, the political importance of the transaction lies mainly in the fact that two-thirds of the payment is to be in kind, delivered over two years. Israelis hope this will be a lever for the resumption of trade, which was interrupted in 1956 when the Soviet Union abrogated a citrus-for-oil barter agreement to penalize the Israelis for attacking Egypt in Sinai.

Arab Governments have protested strongly against the transaction, which implies Soviet recognition of Israel's sovereignty over her sector of divided Jerusalem. The fact that Russia disregarded the protests has been noted hopefully in Israel and Russia's Middle East policy has been regarded as inspired mainly by a wish to please the Arabs.

Last of Five Warburg Brothers, Of Famous U.S. And German Banking Family, Dies In Israel

Dr. Fritz Moritz Warburg, the last and youngest of five brothers who were members of a famous German and American banking family, died in Nezer Sereni, Israel. He was 85 years old, says the New York Times. For centuries the family figured prominently in German financial circles and the firm bearing their name, M. M. Warburg & Co. of Hamburg, was founded in the 18th century.

The brothers, besides Dr. Warburg, were: Felix M. Warburg, American philanthropist and senior partner in the banking firm of Kuhn, Loeb & Co., in New York; Paul M. Warburg, American philanthropist and board chairman of the Manhattan Company and the International Acceptance Bank of New York, in New York; Max M. Warburg, of Hamburg and later New York, banker and philanthropist; and Dr. Aby M. Warburg, art historian who, after the Nazis took over moved the Warburg Library of books on art to London from Hamburg.

The brothers were the sons of the late Moritz Warburg and the late Mrs. Charlotte Esther Oppenheim Warburg. The father was the head of M. M. Warburg & Co.

Dr. Warburg was born in Hamburg, received a Doctor of Laws degree from a German university, but did not practice law. Instead he went through a banking apprenticeship with Diskontogesellschaft, a bank in Frankfurt.

In 1907 Dr. Warburg joined M. M. Warburg & Co. in Hamburg as a partner. In World War I he was a commercial attache of the German Government at its legation in Stockholm. Later he returned to Hamburg. He was a partner in the family firm till the Nazis took it over.

In 1938, Dr. Warburg, a Jew, was seized by the Nazis. He was held for several months and then released. He went to Stockholm, became a Swedish citizen, and remained in Stockholm for many years.

For the last few years Dr. Warburg had been living in Israel.

Surviving are: his widow, Mrs. Anna Warburg Warburg, a distant cousin; three daughters, Mrs. Ingrid Spinelli, of Rome; Mrs. Eva Unger, of Israel; and Mrs. Charlotte Schmulewitz, of Israel; a twin sister, Mrs. Louis Derenberg, of Ilkley, England; and 11 grandchildren.

German Courts Work To Convince World Opinion Of Their Painstaking Efforts To Track Down Nazi Criminals

It unfolded better than a thriller, that story of the minor police official from the neighbourhood of Stuttgart who, during a spell of leave from serving on the Russian front in 1941, came home with one too many one night and produced before his astounded wife some solid gold roubles he had got hold of there. Pressed by her to explain their origin, he first declined, in spite of his drunken state.

Then the whole thing came out, and he even showed her a picture of himself standing proudly in front of a pile of corpses. She was horrified; but he assured her it was all in a day's work.

Many years later, when peace had returned to Germany, husband and wife drifted apart. She obtained a divorce, but later told her new husband how much she feared revenge from the former one, and what sort of man he was. The new husband reported to the local public prosecutor; the former husband was questioned, but denied any recollection of the story. So the case was dropped.

However, Herr Erwin Schüle, a senior state prosecutor in charge of the Central Office for the Prosecution of Nazi Crimes at Ludwigsburg, suspected that there might be a great deal lurking behind this incident. He interrogated the former husband, who maintained his denials; then he concentrated on the wife.

Could she remember what police unit her husband had belonged to? She could not. Did she recall his field post-office number? She thought she could find it.

Number in hand, Herr Schüle discovered that it was that of Police Battalion 316, B Company, raised in the neighbourhood of Gelsenkirchen in the Ruhr. With two criminal police officers, he went to the police headquarters of the locality, and asked to see any old files that had been preserved.

After two days' search in the cellar, the files had yielded nothing. Just as he was about to leave empty-handed, a younger policeman came up to him and said: "Herr Oberstaatsanwalt, have you looked behind the central heating furnace? There are a lot of old papers there."

It was thus that the complete archives of Extermination Commando 8 in central Russia, its activities documented with the extraordinary care the Nazi regime brought to cataloguing its crimes, were discovered.

Its commander, S.S. Obersturmbannführer Otto Bradfisch, responsible for tens of thousands of murders of Jews, was living, like so many others of his like, under an assumed name in Bavaria and working as a peaceful insurance agent. He was brought to justice and sentenced first in Munich, and again in Hanover, to long terms of hard labour.

It was a sensational trial at Ulm in 1958 of members of the Tilsit Extermination Commando during the war which revealed the extent of the crimes committed by the Gestapo and units of the state security forces in occupied territories during the war still to be dealt with by German justice.

Until then, it was assumed that the main Nazi criminals had been judged, by the allies at Nuremberg and in their separate courts, and by the Germans themselves when they recovered jurisdiction. Concentration camp staffs, for instance, were easier to track down; there had been survivors. But the leaders of extermination commandos, by definition, left no witnesses; and towards the end of the war many of them were ruthlessly suppressed by their own leaders to cover up the traces.

Those who survived the collapse gave themselves false identities, often as soldiers killed at the front, and, aided by the confusion and chaos of the postwar years, started a new life in relative security, often in Germany itself. The greater part of the necessary documentation was also still in allied hands, and not accessible to Germans. Only in 1960, for instance, when he went to the United States and called at the National Archives in Washington was Herr Schüle, senior state prosecutor, able to lay hands on much of the material evidence he required.

The Chief Ministers of the Länder recognized the urgency and seriousness of the challenge. It was necessary, as Dr. Wolfgang Hausmann, the Justice Minister of Baden-Württemberg, told the Landtag, that German courts should proceed without delay in order to "convince world opinion that the Federal Republic was making every effort to bring the guilty, the really guilty from the period of arbitrary rule, to rightful punishment".

At Bad Harzburg in October, 1958, they agreed that coordinated efforts were essential and created a central office for the prosecution of Nazi criminals to span the whole country — a departure from the principle of judicial supremacy of the individual Länder.

As Baden-Württemberg had first proposed the office, it was chosen to house it. The central prison at Ludwigsburg was selected.

"When I began here five years ago", Herr Schüle told the London Times correspondent, "I was alone with two secretaries, and had not a single file to work on." Now he has 10 prosecutors assisting him, and some 300 picked

Canadian Jewish Congress Brands C.B.C. Interview With U.S. Nazi On TV As "Serious Disservice" To Country

October 25, an interview with George Lincoln Rockwell, of the American Nazi party, was telecast by the CBC as part of a program recently introduced and called "This Hour Has Seven Days".

The interview was preceded by an introductory note indicating that "many protests have been received by the CBC since the program was announced two days ago, coupled with requests that the program be cancelled". However, the CBC "disagreed", as it wants to "expose extremism in its monstrosity".

In answer to one of the questions, Rockwell said that a "Nazi party also exists in Canada and that its following is about one hundred people."

Canadian Jewish Congress in a public statement, authorized by Michael Garber, Q.C., president of the Canadian Jewish Congress, protested against the T.V. interview with George Lincoln Rockwell, The Congress statement read:

"The Canadian Jewish Congress protests in the strongest terms possible the irresponsible action of the Canadian Broadcasting Corporation in presenting to a country-wide television audience the views of the discredited American Nazi, George Lincoln Rockwell.

"No pretensions of 'public exposure', as offered by the program, 'This Hour Has Seven Days', can justify the publicity given to Rockwell personally and to his lies and invective. The CBC, in glamourizing a self-confessed follower of Hitler and preacher of genocide, is guilty of an act against the public interest.

"The need to attract an audience is no excuse for irresponsibility. Rockwell has not been newsworthy for a long time either in Canada or for that matter in the United States, nor are he and his handful of hoodlum followers a matter of public interest or concern to Canadians. Indeed, Rockwell gets no such coverage in his own country as was given to him by the CBC in Canada.

"Canadians must regret deeply that the CBC has committed a serious disservice to the interests of our Canadian society, by giving currency to the rantings and ravings of this tragically unbalanced but dangerous United States citizen".

The issue was also raised in the House of Commons October 26 and the debate was widely reported in the press, radio, and T.V. Marvin Gelber, M.P., was quoted by the Canadian Press as having said that "the CBC was not convincing when it claimed that the Rockwell interview would expose and disarm anti-Semitic and anti-Negro extremist groups". The Canadian Press dispatch referred to Mr. Gelber as "Liberal M.P. for York South and an officer of the Canadian Jewish Congress" and said that his statement received "heavy applause from all parts of the House". Milton Klein, Q.C., M.P., was quoted as having "charged that the CBC clearly violated Canada's broadcasting regulations. . . The CBC had claimed to expose and disarm the far-right extremist fringe by interviewing Rockwell, but in fact it had broken the law and imported a U.S. problem to Canada".

A resolution expressing concern over the program was also adopted at the opening session of the Zionist Convention in Montreal (the evening of October 24).

The Montreal Gazette had a write-up entitled "Sensationalism Used As Bait", saying that "no amount of fancy advance explanations about the need to be forewarned about this hate group can remove the suspicion that the whole thing was done for sensationalism, to create controversy and increase the ratings of the show."

GERMAN COURTS WORK TO CONVINCE WORLD OPINION

police officials throughout the country investigating the details of Nazi crime in Europe, and tracking down the principal wrongdoers, their underlings, and, if still alive, witnesses as far afield as South America and Australia. Most relevant documents are sole copies bearing the highest security classification of the Third Reich.

The painstaking work and investigation has paid dividends. "Not a single name came up in the Eichmann trial", Herr Schüle emphasized, "of which we had not had prior knowledge here." In the five years of existence of the central office some 650 cases have been investigated, involving 1,000 to 1,250 persons.

By the end of this year Ludwigsburg will have brought its task to a close, with the exception of a small information role; but it will be another four to five years before the cases themselves have been dealt with, and German justice can really draw a line under the record of past crime.

The whole pattern of extermination has been carefully pieced together. "In our experience", Herr Schüle explained, "the Nazis used about 1,000 trained murderers all over Europe to do their dirty work, far fewer than one normally imagined. We traced a leading member of the Gestapo, who before the war had been responsible for mercy killings, to Lublin and later Treblinka in Poland, in charge of an extermination group with the same team. A year afterwards he cropped up in occupied Yugoslavia, and then in northern Italy, leaving a trail of blood wherever he passed."

The small policeman or rank and file of the S.S. who did the dirty work under pain of death themselves are not the game Herr Schüle and his assistants are after, reports the London Times, unless it can be proved they brought a personal touch of sadism to the business.

Yeshiva U. Professor, Once Of Toronto, Is Rabbi, Son Of Rabbi, Author

On the centenary of the death of Israel Zangwill, noted Anglo-Jewish writer who dedicated his life to the betterment of mankind and the cause of religious unity, a new biography, "Israel Zangwill: A Study," by Dr. Maurice Wohlgelernter, Rabbi, assistant professor of English at Yeshiva College, in New York, has just been published by Columbia University Press. Dr. Wohlgelernter, who has also been leader of the Inwood Jewish Center, in New York, since 1946, gives a critical appraisal of Zangwill's writing, philosophy, and religion by examining his novels, plays, poetry, essays, Zionist activities, and polemical works against the historic and intellectual events of his time.

The 43-year-old scholar examines Zangwill's most famous novel, "Children Of The Ghetto," a description of Jewish ghetto life in London's East End, in relation to the novels of Zola and other realistic works of the nineties.

Dr. Wohlgelernter explains the complexity of Zangwill's thought in this way: "To show 'the other side of everything' was, for him, the beginning of wisdom. If, for example, he loved peace, he also admired Napoleon; if he followed Tolstoy's aesthetic, he was no less attracted to Pater and the French symbolists; if he escaped the ghetto in search of Western culture, he proceeded to return to it, at least in spirit if not in fact."

Dr. Wohlgelernter joined the faculty at Yeshiva College as an English instructor in 1955. He has also been a visiting assistant professor of English and the humanities at the City College of New York. Dr. Wohlgelernter, who hails from Toronto, Ont., Canada, received ordination from Yeshiva University's Rabbi Isaac Elchanan Theological Seminary in 1944. He holds the B.A. degree from Yeshiva College; M.A. and Ph.D. degrees from Columbia University.

Dr. Wohlgelernter is the son of Rabbi Jacob I. Wohlgelernter, leader of Eitz Chaim Congregation in Toronto. The senior Rabbi Wohlgelernter lives at 348 Walmer Road, in Toronto.

Listed in Who's Who of American Scholars in 1960, Dr. Wohlgelernter is a member of the Modern Language Association; National Council of Teachers of English; the English Graduate Union, Columbia University; and the American Association of University Professors. He lives with his wife and three children at 62 Park Terrace West, in New York.

WEST GERMAN LAWYER DENOUNCED BY SOCIAL DEMOCRATS

The lawyer had earlier said it was nothing but "legal romanticism" to argue, as many west German lawyers did today, in accordance with contemporary views on war crimes, Hitler's decision to order the "final solution of the Jewish question" had been taken with representatives of the highest legal authorities in the land. On trial is Adolf Schaub, aged 51, a primary school teacher in Lower Saxony at the time of his arrest, says the London Times, who is accused of assisting in the murder of more than 6,000 Jews during the war.

THE VATICAN AND THE JEWISH PROBLEM: REVISION OF CHURCH DOCTRINE LONG OVERDUE

The Congress Bulletin, organ of the Canadian Jewish Congress, says:

It is generally conceded that the principal source of anti-Semitism in Western society for two millenia is imbibed with the mother's milk and then taught at her knee. Its mainspring is Christian theology as transmitted to the masses over the centuries. Would one exaggerate by saying it has been deeply rooted in the Christian ethos? (Recently the Anti-Defamation League performed a useful service in conducting a study of religion in American life as part of a five-year program of research on American anti-Semitism and it is clear that on the story of the crucifixion of Christ the preliminary report confirms what we all knew that Christians blame the Jews and we are the legatees of such blame.)

The attempt to produce an authoritative statement at the Vatican II Ecumenical Council rejecting the charge of deicide made history when John XXIII first considered it but was frustrated at the Second Session (1963) by the influences of politically motivated Armenian and other Moslem country bishops.

At the same time the Jewish world was treated to the sorry spectacle of witnessing its leadership asking, nay begging, to be forgiven for something they never did. The Canadian Jewish Congress remained aloof from the intense publicity aspects and in its official organ, the Congress Bulletin, severely criticized the attitudes of those whose vision seemed so out of focus.

Recently the Council at the Third Session debated the Schema on Jews all over again. It is heartening to know that the Jewish community was somewhat chastened by the experiences of the previous year and by the forthright attitude of the North American Bishops.

Canadian Jews will derive some considerable satisfaction in knowing that among the corps of liberal prelates were included Paul-Emile, Cardinal Leger, Archbishop of Montreal, and Archbishop Pocock alter ego of the ailing Cardinal McGuigan of Toronto. These, with some American bishops, a few Europeans (Austrian, German) have vigorously championed an open declaration untrammelled by casuistic niceties and unhedged by conversionary ambitions.

The Jewish position during the three years from the time Cardinal Bea's memorandum was first published to the present moment is interesting to record and important to analyse. On the whole we have run a gamut of emotions from elation to despair. The less secular have wagged an admonishing finger with "I told you so" accompaniment when the first draft was rejected, and the second draft which had included the conversionary element, was released. Others have even gone so far as to say that the Vatican's Schemas are none of our business.

The argument is that anti-Semitism is a Christian problem and not a Jewish one and since it is a Christian one, let the Christian leadership, in this case, the Ecumenical Council, worry about its own problems without our interventions or even our advices. It surely is a spurious argument.

One wonders how angelically the Jewish victims of the various Crusades of the Middle Ages must have answered the demonic cries of HEP, HEP (Herosholayim est perdita) by uttering St. Bernard of Clairvaux or Richard, Coeur de Lion or Peter, the Hermit, or Godfrey of Bouillon to do the worrying since the murders and outrages were not a Jewish problem but theirs!

Or, to jump some centuries in time, why should not the Nazis have been reassured, that persecution and annihilation of Jews was not a Jewish but a German problem? Of course, anti-Semitism is our problem. In many ways it has been the most traumatic problem of Jewish history. If anti-Semitism degrades the perpetrator this hardly means it ennobles the victim.

Of course, anti-Semitism is our problem. Of course, what induces it is also our problem. The teachings of Christianity indicting the Jews is one of our very major problems. It also follows that what we can do with dignity and decency to remove one of the most remarkable falsehoods of all time ought to be done. The lives and happiness of future generations ought not to become a parlour-game of philosophy as to whose problem anti-Semitism really is. Let the dead past of mediaevalism record the number of angels who can dance on the point of a needle but let us be heirs of our own century.

There is evidence that many churchmen themselves wish to reject mediaevalism and enter the modern world. The place which history may well give to John XXIII and his coterie of liberals is their recognition of certain new postulates: one, that the Church simply cannot preserve a position of institutional power and preeminence in a modern society; secondly, to quote a very well-known Austrian theologian, Karl Rahner, S.J., "Catholicism does not have a complete recipe for the world's problems in its pockets;" thirdly, the secular world of today and tomorrow is not the ground for religio-cultural autonomy, and to think that one can maintain the postulate known to previous centuries is to head for trouble.

If we believe in our destiny we must equally believe that we must act vigorously on many levels and one of these levels surely is to participate as best we can in inspiring a new chapter in the history of the West where revision of Church doctrine, long overdue, may engender for future generations an environment much happier for Jews than heretofore.
